Preserve what matters

A person's life is more than the present day. It holds work, care, knowledge, decisions and support for others.

The purpose

HUMAS System invites care home residents to revisit their history and gradually describe their life journey through a personal account. The programme centres on the person: their memories, choices and contribution.

What to recall

A professional life, raising children, caring for loved ones, helping a community, creative work and sharing knowledge. Major events and quiet, everyday acts can both be meaningful.

From a story to a declaration

The person selects significant episodes and prepares an account of their contribution for declaration under the current HUMAS System rules. A personal account and a verified record have different statuses: declaring a memory does not automatically verify it.

A conversation example

A resident recalls years spent training younger colleagues. With a helper, they clarify the period, their role and any surviving materials, then decide what to include. This illustrates participation; it is not a promise of credits.

A personal account. Your own choices

The programme is based on individual participation. A care home does not need a corporate account to get started.

An invitation from HUMAS System

An introduction to the platform may begin with a referral link in an invitation from HUMAS System. Before registering, the participant reviews access conditions, the package and its price. The link itself does not promise free participation or credits.

Support at a comfortable pace

A staff member or loved one can help read instructions, discuss memories and learn the interface. The participant chooses the topics, how much to share and the pace. They can pause or decide not to continue.

Respect for personal boundaries

Providing help does not give the care home control over the person's account, data or assets. Any access or action on their behalf requires a separate basis and compliance with applicable rules. Other people's personal information should not be included unnecessarily.

If the care home wishes to join

Corporate participation is considered separately, within the existing HUMAS System capabilities and terms. The residents' programme does not include developing a dedicated care home management platform.

Continuity and future possibilities

Preserving a life journey matters today. Possible financial support belongs to a separate future development of the system.

Preparing a legacy

The programme aims to help people document meaningful life experience and consider how to pass it to future generations. Transferring records, rights and available assets depends on HUMAS System capabilities and applicable procedures; participation does not automatically transfer everything to heirs.

How contribution is recorded

HUNIT is an internal unit for recording verified participation under the platform's methodology. It is not a monetary valuation of a person. Entering a life story alone does not guarantee HUNIT credits or receipt of HUMAScoin.

Possible support with care costs

In the future, if HUMAScoin exchange becomes available and system conditions are met, participants will be able to use the proceeds towards accommodation and care, among other purposes. Listing alone does not guarantee value, liquidity or the ability to sell. The amount of support is neither predetermined nor guaranteed and should not be included in a current care payment budget.
